It is issued after all legal avenues, including appeals and mercy petitions, are exhausted, and the sentence of death is finalized.

In India, the process of issuing a black warrant involves several steps:

- Approval from the Governor of the state
- Issuance of the warrant by the appropriate judicial authority
- Notification to the prison authorities, who then prepare for the execution

The Significance of Black Warrants in Indian Justice

The black warrant is the last formal step before executing a death penalty. It ensures that the execution is carried out legally and within the prescribed judicial procedures. The warrant specifies:

- The date and time of execution
- The name of the condemned prisoner
- The method of execution (usually hanging in India)

- Other pertinent instructions

The issuance of a black warrant is a highly sensitive process, often surrounded by legal, ethical, and human rights debates.
