Native American tribes, with their profound spiritual connection to the land, often viewed walking as a sacred act—an ongoing dialogue with nature. When European settlers arrived, their peregrinations became intertwined with themes of conquest, exploration, and the pursuit of a new life.

The 18th and 19th centuries saw writers like James Fenimore Cooper and Washington Irving depict wandering through wilderness as emblematic of American frontier spirit. Cooper's descriptions of traversing untamed landscapes in the Leatherstocking Tales exemplify how walking through nature became a symbol of resilience and independence.

The Romantic and Transcendentalist Influence

The Romantic movement and later Transcendentalism in America elevated walking as an essential means of personal enlightenment. Writers like Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau championed walking as a form of communion with nature and a pathway to self-discovery. Thoreau's seminal work, Walden, chronicles his solitary walks and deliberate living in the woods as a pursuit of authenticity.

Thoreau's walks, often solitary and contemplative, serve as acts of resistance against societal conformity. His famous essay Walking articulates the importance of wandering freely in natural landscapes, emphasizing that walking can be a form of philosophical inquiry. For Thoreau, peregrinations weren't merely physical acts—they were spiritual quests rooted in the desire to understand oneself and the universe.
